BEST EXPONENT OF DEMO-CRATIC PRINCILES.

(Extract from Private Letter.)

I regard the CHRONICLE as the best exponent of sound Democratic principles people. in North Carolina and indispensable to every young man who wishes to vote the Democratic ticket. No household can be complete without it.

LET ALL BE REPRESENTED.

It is hoped that every Democratic club in North Carolina will send representatives to the great club gathering in Raleigh next Wednesday and Thursday. From far away Asheville ten representative Democrats will come; Charlotte will send ten; Durham, ten; Henderson, ten, and all other towns and townships sented. At the great gathering in Penn- ed." sylvania this week over 1,400 delegates were present. North Carolina's convention ought not to have less than 500 or 600 delegates, besides as many alternates and visitors. Of course on Thursday ten thousand of the unterrified Democracy are expected to hear distinguished speakers and help Raleigh people do justice to the biggest barbecue ever given in Raleigh.

Gov. Fowle will deliver the address of welcome to the delegates to the club convention which will contain many of the brightest and most promising men in the Democratic ranks.

A WISE UTTERANCE BY A WISE MAN.

Among others, Mr. J. B. PHILLIPS, who represented Nash county in the House, in 1889, and is a candidate for re-election, spoke a few days ago at an Alliance pic-nic in Edgecombe county. As reported by the Scotland Neck Democrat, he made an excellent speech. We have space only for the following words of wisdom:

The speaker urged upon his hearers that the Alliance must not split off from the Democratic party. He said such a move would mean Alliance failure, Dem ocratic disaster and republican rule. His speech was logical and sound and was well received.

A. V. Dockery, son of "My son Oli-VER," ought to be a good Republican authority, says that seventy Republicans in the State Convention did not vote for re-recruit PRICE for Chief Justice, and that he does not believe in nominating "Gen. Knickerbocker Have You Seen Cast Away Democrats.

IF LAWYERS CANNOT JOIN THE ALLI-ANCE, HOW DID LAWYER McIVER (John Williamson's candidate for Congress) GET local Democracy, and it is whispered IN?-Chatham Record.

THE N. C. ELECTION LAW.

It has been suggested that the Republicans who are making so much fuss about the changes in the North Carolina election law have never read the law and are under the impression that it is the Payne bill which passed the Senate. The Payne bill was very much like the election law in Republican Massachusetts and practically established an educational qualification. If it had been enacted into a law it would not have been But, after the Payne bill was introduced, the Democrats had a discussion and decided not to enact it into a law, and not to cut off those who had not the advantage of an education from voting. The bill died. The changes in the election law are in no sense kindred to those in the Payne bill, which differed slightly from the Australian bailot law which is rapidly being adopted in all the States. The changes, as pointed out yesterday, are slight and make no material alteration in the old law except the more certainly to prevent fraudulent voting.

Let Republicans read the law that was adopted - not the one that was debated and discussed in the Senate, and if they are fair they will put an end to their misrepresentations.

JAY GOULD INTERVIEWED.

JAY GOULD has been interviewed by no stringency exists in the money market, and what stringency has existed was confined to the speculative quarters. circulation. He also declares his belief in the protective tariff, and approval of MR. BLAINE's reciprocity plan, and says 1st District—J. H. BLOUNT, of Perquimans stretch, s out before us stretch s out before us.

This goes to show that it is easy and natural for men to view questions from no other than their own standpoint. With his $100,000,000 -made by trusts, pools, tariff, and contraction of the currency—he cannot be expected to see any necessity for any change in legislation or any evil in government.

Why should he?

With him "trusts are private affairs with which the public has nothing to do;" the tariff, an agency for putting money in his purse; and contraction of the currency an easy method of increasing the purchasing power of his dollars. By his own evidence he is "a Democrat in Democratic districts; a Republican in Republican districts; a Greenbacker in Greenback districts; but a Central Pacific man all the time." But, though all things to all men in order that he may advance his schemes, he is all the time at heart an enemy to

1. Tariff Reform. 2. Financial Reform.

3. Regulation of railroads and telegraph lines.

If the Democrats could secure a reform in these three particulars MR. Gould would not regard the condition of business as so satisfactory. It would put an end to his rapid accumulation of wealth at the expense of the whole HOLDING COTTON.

The Advice the President of the Georgia Alliance Gives.

(Atlanta Journal.) Col. L. F. Livingston, President of the Georgia State Alliance and Democratic nominee for Congress in the Atlanta District, does not think well of the further. Meeting an acquaintance, he Just to hand in half barrels and barrels at proposition to have one great warehouse where a million bales of cotton could be suggested that he go and see the Govstored. He urges as objections: 1. The ernor, thinking, doubtless, that he cost of insurance; 2. Cost of transportation; 3. Cost of hauling; 4. It would build one place at the expense of others. "Now," he added, "some of these objections might be overlooked if an advance of $32 a bale could be secured. I think a farmer should hold his cotton if he is not in debt. My advice to the farmers on this question is this: Put vour cotton in the hands of your meryour cotton in the hands of your merchant if you are indebted to him, not to be sold, but as a security for the debt, and let him draw on the cotton to relieve his own indebtedness."

a Whale?" (Oxford Public Ledger.)

A weekly paper, The Whale, is to appear in Raleigh soon, in the interest of that it will be particularly lively.

A SENSIBLE SURVEY OF THE FILLD.

[From Reanoke News which is edited by a n ember of the Alliance.]

The Alliance is a conservative body of men; they do their own thinking, they are willing to listen to reason and they are fair-minded enough to consider argument and reasons from which they differ. We have, therefore, little fear that they will go wrong.

Let us take a survey of the whole field, for in this way only can we act wisely and with advantage. The Alliance demands the enactment of several measures. Among them are the subtreasury bill, a railroad commission bill, greater taxation for education, prohibition of the practice of giving away the labor of convicts, the reduction of costs in minor causes, the use by public officials of free railroad passes, and others equally as important. All these measures must come before the State Legislature save and except the sub treasury bill which is a national measure.

Now, should we run any risk of losing all these reforms for the sake of gaining one? Should we jeopardize our chances of success by insisting on every one of these measures? Or should we not be willing to accept a part now and abide our time for the others?

We must remember that there are many Democrats in the State who are not members of the Alliance, but who are in accord with it in most of its demands. Should we frighten them off from us by insisting on what they cannot see their way to helping us secure? There are many enemies of the Farmers' Alliance in North Carthe Philadelphia Times. He says that olina who are continuously and assiduously trying to break the order in pieces by sowing seeds of discord among us, hoping in this way to create dissen sions and divisions among the membees He says that there is plenty of money in of the Alliance, and thereby destroy it. Should not we be willing to yield something in order to circumvent the machinations of the enemy and so make ourselves stronger for the death struggle two or four years from now?

in North Carolina to accomplish all the reforms upon which it has set the seal of its approval without the aid of its friends who are debarred from membershp. It would be un wise in the extreme to alienate those friends and gladden the hearts position in politics or by the appearance of being as heavy task masters as those ourselves.

The Alliance has come to stay. It is not a mush room nor a Jonah's gourd. It is a permanent institution, or, at least, can be made so by conservatism and statesmanship. Reforms come slowly. Rome was not built in a day. We must not expect to correct in a year or two the evils that have been rooting themselves into our institutions for a half century. If we accomplish one or two reforms at a time we can be satisfied, conscious that in a few more years we can accomplish others. If we cannot get all we want, let us come as near it as we can, and not be like children-refusing what we can get because we cannot get everything.

Above all things, let us stand united, let us be willing to give up our own individual opinions for the good of the whole. Let us not be so intent on one thing that we lose sight of others equally as important and more direct in results. If we are actuated by such motives and purposes we are sure to succeed; if not, the Alliance will lose all it has so laboriously and carefully builded and will have to begin a new with the added weight of previous defeat.

DO CORPORATIONS HAVE SOULS?

[Lenoir Topic.]

A legal maxim, handed down from Blackstone and generally accepted by the public, is to the effect that "corporations have no souls," and the deduction has further been made that they are all grinding and grasping. There is no denying that many incidents can be given illustrating this unamiable characteristic of corporations. An incident showing the opposite spirit has come to our notice and we think it worthy of publication. The Richmond and Danville Railroad Company is the hero. A lady, coming to Lenoir, desired to purchase at Washington a round-trip excursion ticket for $18, but by mistake bought a straight ticket for $13 and some cents. She did not discover her mistake till the conductor took up her ticket on the train. She took down the number of the ticket and when she got to Lenoir, wrote to Mr. James L. Taylor, general passenger agent at Washington, telling him of her mis-take, and asking if he could sell her a round trip ticket at this time. His reply was a courteous offer to send her a ticket payment of the difference between a straight ticket and a round trip ticket. a mistake made by a passenger, that it was not bound to correct.

OUT OF MONEY, HE FINDS FRIENDS.

Gov. Gordon Pities an Old Soldier and Helps Him on the Way. (Atlanta Constitution.)

Mr. Wadlington, of North Carolina, an old Confederate soldier, was in the city yesterday, out of money and in dire distress. He had come this far on his way to Gainesville, and could get no told of his trouble. The acquaintance might in that way find employment.

Mr. Wadlington went to see the Governor, who helped him on his way with $5. With this he was able to get to Gainesville, where he expects to find friends.
